Local People Celebrated Their 50th Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Woodward of Addison-Woodhull Road observed golden wedding Sunday, September 11—Received many gifts and congratulations.

Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Woodward of the Addison-Woodhull road celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary Sunday, September 11th. About noon relatives began to arrive until twenty-eight were present. After they had been served a bountiful dinner all assembled on the lawn for a photograph of the honored couple as well as one of the entire group. Mr. and Mrs. Woodward were presented gifts as well as the congratulations of their friends.

Those present were Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Woodward, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Whiteman, Archie Woodward, Mr. Gosper of Jasper, Mr .and Mrs. S. B. Card, Kenneth, Elwin, Theron and Ward Woodward of Woodhull; Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Calkins, Linsford Calkins of Borden; Mr. and Mrs. Howard Woodward, Leonard, Norma and Nelson Woodward of Solvay; Herbie Woodward, Mr. and Mrs. George Hargrave, Raymond and Harold Hargrave, Mr. and Mrs. George Wildrick and Jerry Wildrick of Addison, and the guests of honor, Mr. and Mrs. Woodward.

League Moves to Raise Milk Price

New York, Sept 13—Raising of wholesale milk prices to a standard level "as a means of abolishing price cutting and concessions to stabilize the market and bring farmers higher returns," was announced today by Fred H. Sexauer, president of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association, Inc. The increase is effective Tuesday, September 20.

"Farmers cannot continue to exist and produce milk at present prices," said Mr. Sexauer. "The Dairymen's Cooperative Association is taking definite action to stabilize the wholesale market. We are leading the way, whether other faction in the industry will follow our lead to provide producers a better price remains to be seen.

"About 50 percent of the milk sold in New York goes into the wholesale trade—stores, restaurants, soda fountains and other large buyers. Price cutting is common during the summer flush production period. This year, however, the price cutting has been unusually severe and as a result the market is demoralized. Returns to producers have declined to levels that have destroyed farmers' buying power. They cannot purchase the products of urban workmen. There can be no permanent return of prosperity unless farmers' buying power is restored.

"Success of this attempt to invrease farmers' returns depends upon what course is followed by farmers supplying milk at low prices to dealers who use it to cut prices in the wholesale market."

WOODHULL PEOPLE VISITED JASPER

Several from this place spent Friday evening in Jasper. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. La Rue Symonds, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Brotzman, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Andrews, Marriam Hackett, Esther House, Mary Hoar, Everett Kilmer, Walter Smith Jr., Howard Husted.

PAINT BEAUTIFIES STORE AND HOUSES

The store front of H. P. Smith and Son is receiving a coat of fresh paint, also the residences of W. P. Symonds, George Moore, Mrs. Mary Brown and the Misses Minnie and Nora Allen.

MAKES HIS HOME IN HORNELL NOW

Dr. Searles succeeds Dr. William M. Young. The latter for six years, the term of appointment as district superintendent, resided here. Dr. Young established a precedent in this, as such superintendents, prior to Dr. Young, had resided for years in Corning. This is a part of this district.

Mrs. and Mrs. Forrest Perry with their daughter Betty and Betty and Geraldine Pepper, Mr. and Mrs. Nathan House, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Laffkas, daughter Martha, Mrs. Leah Brown and Mr. Manley of Addison, were in town Friday evening to witness the play "Henry's wedding."

Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Davis, sons Eugene and David, were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Peake in Morris.

Play "Henry's Wedding" Brought Large Crowd

The play "Henry's Wedding" which was given by local talent under the personal direction of Miss Margaret Munro was greatly enjoyed by a full house both evenings.

The evening was filled with fun and laughter from start to finish. The laugh hit of the show seemed to be "The Beaus and Belles of Grandma's Time".

The characters of the play, also those of the Mystic Shrine, members of the chorus and those in the special musical numbers are all worthy of special mention.

Never has such an entertainment met with as great success in Woodhull and much credit is due Miss Munro who staged the play in about one week.

The proceeds at the door exceeded $175. This was sponsored by the I. O. O. F. and Rebekah lodges.

OLD HOME DAY

Saturday, September 17th, will be a big day at Jasper Five Corners School for all teachers and pupils and families who ever attended school or taught at that place.

There will be games, sports and a good time in general. Come prepared to help with the program and so make the day a success. Bring dishes, silver, sandwiches and some other article of food.

UNDERGOES OPERATION

BIRTH OF DAUGHTER

Word was received here of the birth of a daughter Tuesday, to Mr. and Mrs. Myron Austin of Troupsburg. Mrs. Austin was before her marriage, Miss Velma Preston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Preston.

Mr. and Mrs. Menzo Wildrick of Knoxville called on Mr. and Mrs. Asa T. Smith, Saturday.

Thieves Butcher Calf In Farmer's Field

Rathbone—Joel Potter discovered last Friday that some miscreants had butchered one of his veal calves last week in his pasture field. This is only one of many depredations which have been committed against farmers in West Rathbone. Recently Wheeler Perry reported someone had been digging potatoes out of his field.

The farmers of the vicinity have loaded up their shotguns and plan to form a reception committee for the guilty parties if thieving does not stop.

Presbyterians To Commemorate 100th Anniversary

Plans are well under way for the Centennial of the Addison Presbyterian Church, which will be celebrated Sunday and Monday, Sept. 25 and 26.

The services will start at 10:30 Sunday morning. At five o'clock the same day holy communion will be celebrated in the anditorium. Monday evening supper will be served in the church dining room, after which the assemblage will retire to the main auditorium for a series of talks commemorating the one hundred years of the organization.

The Addison Presbyterian Church was founded in September of 1832, two ministers coming from the Presbytery at Bath to organize the new group. There were only eight members on the first roll, two more being added by the end of 1833.

The country surrounding the hamlet of Addison was almost an unbroken wilderness when the Presbyterian Church was founded, the nearest minister available to supply the congregation living at Erwin Center. He could visit the new church, only infrequently, so the congregation was practically without a pastor for a number of years. No religious edifice stood in Addison one hundred years ago, but in 1839 the enterprising little nucleus of a congregation which had grown in number to twenty-three, busied themselves with the task of building a house of worship.

That building with its additions burned in 1881 and the congregation immediately set to work building the fine house which is the present home of the Addison Presbyterian Church.

A large number of former residents who have in the past been associated with the Presbyterian Church are expected here to attend the centennial services. The congregation and pastor join in extending a hearty invitation for all church people to attend this event commemorating a century's work by a devout religious group.

TAFT—SHELLEY

Miss Althea Shelley of Rathbone and Bert D. Taft of Woodhull, were united in marriage Monday evening at the manse in Jasper by the Rev. E. T. Cook, pastor of the Presbyterian church.

Cole Supporters Claim Nomination

Leaders in the Sterling Cole campaign for the Republican nomination for representanve in Congress are confident that he will defeat Gale H. Stalker next Tuesday in the primaries.

A canvass of Republican leaders in the five counties of the district shows an unmistakable trend away from Mr. Stalker and in the direction of Mr. Cole. The existence of this trend in the 37th district is in accord with what has taken place very generally throughout the nation, for the voters of both parties have used the primary election to drive many congressmen from office. Republicans apparently are determined to replace many longsitting congressmen with new blood.

Three of the five counties are counted as being safe for Sterling Cole and the other two are listed in the doubtful column with the chances even there against Stalker's success.

Steuben, the largest in the district, is claimed for Mr. Cole by at least 4,000 majority. In Chemung, the second largest and Mr. Stalker's home county the ground has started to slide under the feet of the Stalker machine.

A small vote is expected in both Schuyler and Tioga counties, with the former claimed by a Cole leader by a few hundred and the latter probably in the Cole column.

Tompkins is placed safely in the Cole list by members of the Cole committee of that county.

Gale Stalker Versus Cole

—AN EDITORIAL—

Next Tuesday the voters will be called upon to register their preferences in the primaries. The principal contest to Republicans lays between the the condidates for nomination for Congressman.

This campaign has been short and vigorous, the candidates, Congressman Gale H. Stalker and Sterling Cole, both having their followers who claim the victory. The issues of the campaign seemed befogged at first, but during the last few days the relative positions of the two candidates have become pretty clear to most voters.

Study of the campaign and the issues raised, seem to merit a few brief discussions.

The Cole supporters find fault with just two major points in Stalker's tenure of office. First because he has not been chairman of any important Congressional committee, and second because he was not present to vote on an administration bill at the close of the last session.

Mr. Stalker answers, he has been a member of several important committees, but with the Democrats in power in Congress no Republican can expect to become chairman of a committee. When the vote came at the close of the session Mr. Stalker has stated he was [illegible] the hospital having an operation before entering the hospital he paired with a Democrat, which was equivalent to casting his own vote for the administration measure.

Supporters of Mr. Stalker have publicly asked Mr. Cole the following questions: 'In the event of your nomination and election to Congress, Mr. Cole, where would you stand as to a change in the Volstead Law, favoring legalized beer?" "Also let the voters know whether you are for or against the immediate payment of the Soldiers' Bonus."

Mr. Cole has maintained absolute silence, and thus has refused to enlighten the voters as to his stand on these two paramount issues. Is it fair for a candidate to ask [illegible] dry people of the 37th Distri[illegible] their votes without m[illegible] whether he will tru[illegible] them on these ques[illegible] or otherwise?

The REAL trouble with Mr. Stalker is this—HE IS DRY.

Two years ago the liquor interests openly backed the candidacy of Reuben B. Oldfield in the attempt to unseat Mr. Stalker. They failed. This year the wets are waging a more determined fight than ever to unseat dry Congressmen. The 37th District is not the only one in which the representative is being attacked, on grounds which are utterly foreign to the real issue of the fight—the wet and dry question.

It is more than passing strange that in two consecutive elections, the group opposed to Mr. Stalker should go to Bath to seek an opposition candidate. Bath with its fine new post office secured by Mr. Stalker, and its rejuvenated Soldiers' Home brought to life largely through the Congressman's efforts, has surely fared better than any other community of the district through his assistance.

The voters should not be befogged by any extraneous issues in this campaign. There are strong forces busy trying to defeat Mr. Stalker because he is dry. The dry voters of this section will not switch from the candidate who has not been afraid to support the dry cause.

Ministers Pledge Stalker Support For Congressman

Members of the Minister's Association of Corning and vicinity held their first meeting of the fall at the Addison .Baptist church, Monday afternoon, September the 12th. Nineteen ministers were present.

Those who attended were J. V. Axtell, K. E. Arnold, H. E. Kenrick, D. L. Pitts, all of Addison; M. P. Wheeler of Avoca; D. W. Graham, G. L. Parry of Bath; N. S. Chaney, R. T. Hallock, J. Q. Jackson, John O. Mabuce, John Knox, E. J. Stuart, all of Corning; G. N. Arnold of Gibson; G. C. Horter, C. J. Grabb, C. H. Gall, all of Painted Post; Jesse Wilson, B. R. Croft, Woodhull.

Congressman Gale H. Stalker of Elmira addressed the group on the subject of Law Enforcement. Those present not only enjoyed the talk but passed the following resolution: We, the Minister's Association of Corning and Vicinity hereby endorse and pledge our support to the Honorable Gale H. Stalker for Congress from the 37th Congressional District of the State of New York.

Public Service Commission Grants Construction of Bath Pipe Line

Southern Tier Gas Company receives authority to lay line from town of Rathbone to nearby village — Decision will boom natural gas developments in fields around Addison—Two new wells to be drilled.

A permanent market for the Addison-Rathbone field gas was assured yesterday with the announcement of the removal of the last barrier to piping the product to Bath. Southern Tier Gas Company was notified yesterday by the New York Public Service Commission that it had been granted a certificate of authority to build and operate its proposed line from the township of Rathbone to the village limits of Bath.

The news of this decision, which has been awaited for several months by operators in the field, was telegraphed to the Rochester office of Hammondsport Natural Gas Company, yesterday afternoon. M. R. Marston of the Hammondsport Company, immediately called the Addison Advertiser on long distance to acquaint the publishers with this important news.

The telegram acquainting Hammondsport Natural Gas Company of the favorable decision of the commission, was signed by Joseph Kaufman, manager of the Suothern Tier Company. In his wire Mr. Kaufman assured the local operators the market would provide a good outlet for their gas of a permanent nature. He added that work on the new line would be started immediately.

The Southern Tier Gas Company is a subsidiary of the Donovan Construction Company, a strong concern operating in Minnesota and New York. Southern Tier Gas Completed the survey for the new line which will run directly north from the field into Bath, and purchased the right of ways necessary. It is understood that materials for the line were ordered several days ago, and this will be delivered on the right of way shortly. Actual work of laying the pipe will start without delay.

It is estimated that the new pipe line will cost approximately $100,000, running a distance of twelve miles from the center of the proven field to Bath village line. A large number of men will be employed digging the ditch and covering the pipe. In addition to the main trunk line, it will be necessary for the construction company to lay a series of gathering lines throughout the field to connect the different wells to the main.

Southern Tier Gas Company desires to get the new supply of natural gas into Bath as early as possible this fall, before cold weather begins. When arrangements were first discussed for the new line, the contractors expressed confidence it could be constructed in approximately sixty days. The element of time is even more important now with the approach of winter than it was several months ago, so it is believed every effort will be put forth to rush the job.

The favorable decision of the commission is big news for a great number of people. The many land owners in the local field can look forward to an early income from the gas under their farms, and the operating companies will sell gas to enlarge their operations. The greater activity in the field coupled with the building of the line itself will furnish employment to many men who sorely need the work.

The people of Bath will benefit greatly by the new line. They have been supplied artificial gas at a price which has been practically prohibitive, and with the coming of the new economical fuel will effect a large saving. The price at the village line will be 50 cents a thousand, while the consumer price is expected to run from one dollar to 80 cents a thousand, dependent upon the amount used.

Operators in the field were expecting a favorable decision on the Bath pipe line, and in anticipation activity has already been renewed in the local field. Last week a new location was made by Tri-State and Wright, Kriz, Mays and Barry on the Elwin DeMun farm. The derrick was erected and the new well was spudded in yesterday. The DeMun well is a short distance west of the two Sovocool wells, and within the proven limits of the field.

A second new well has been located by Hammondsport Natural Gas Corporation, et al, on the Murray Slayton farm a short distance northeast of the Newcomb well. Wright and Kriz have moved a standard rig from the vicinity of Rochester, and the derrick will be erected in a few days. Drilling will begin in the near future.

Addison Veteran Died Tuesday

Milton E. Crane, prominent Addison man and a veteran of the Civil War, passed away at his home on East Front Street Tuesday evening at 9:30 o'clock. Mr. Crane was subject to the infirmatives of old age, and his end was not unexpected.

Mr. Crane was born in the town of Cameron, June 16, 1848 the son of Milton E. and Julia Swartwood Crane, being one of a family of ten children. While still a mere boy of 16 he enlisted in 1864 into Company H, 141st N. Y. Volunteer Infantry. He accompanied Sherman on the strenuous campaign through the south, marching through Georgia to the sea. At the close of the war Mr. Crane received his honorable discharge, and returned to civilian life.

For a number of years he was active in the lumbering industry which was at its zenith in the post Civil War period. He became a riverman and accompanied scores of log rafts down the Canisteo and Susquehanna Rivers which took them to the big lumber markets on the Chesapeake. He had the distinction of riding the last raft of logs which floated down the famous Kettle Creek course in Pennsylvania.

Quite early in life he learned the blacksmithing trade, and for a number of years kept a shop in Cameron. In 1890 he removed his business to Addison, remaining active for about twenty-five years more. He retired from the blacksmithing business in 1916 to become deputy sheriff, and at the expiration of his term did not return to strenuous work. He remained very active for a man of his years up to a year [illegible] and retained his keen mental [illegible] practically to the last. He [illegible] to his bed since the [illegible].

Mr. Crane married Sarah Snyder of Cameron, Feb. 19, 1871, the couple celebrating their golden anniversary in 1921. Mrs. Crane died in May of the same year.

Mr. Crane was a typical example of the vigorous, hard working American citizen which has formed stable backbone for our population. Friendly in disposition, yet strongly outspoken for his beliefs, he was a man who will be sorely missed in his community. His death leaves but one remaining Civil War veteran in Addison.

Mr. Crane leaves two daughters, Mrs. Cora Sanford who resided with him and Mrs. J. A. Whitmore of Buffalo; three sons, Elbert D., Charles L. and Frank Crane, all of Addison; eight grandchildren, Miss Janet Crane, Harold, Kenneth and Milton Crane, Mrs. Richard McLaughlin, Miss Sallie Whitmore, Miss Phyllis Whitmore and James Whitmore Jr.; also a great grandchild, Sallie Whitmore McLaughlin.

The funeral will be held from the late home Friday afternoon at two o'clock. Burial in Addison Rural cemetery. The Rev. J. V. Axtell will be the officiating clergyman.

MRS. MARGARET REYNOLDS

The funeral for Mrs. Margaret Mather Reynolds of Rathbone, was held from St. Catherine's Church Monday morning. Mrs. Reynolds had been a life long resident of this section where she was favorably known.

She leaves two children, Harry and Margaret, also five sisters, Mrs. E. J. Quackenbush and Mrs. Frank Blickwede of Hornell, Mrs. Eugene Kelly and Mrs. Sue Barrett of Addison and Mrs. Catherine Slack of Cleveland.

Burial was in the Townline Cemetery.

MOSSBERG—MERRING

Miss Esther Mossberg of Rozelle, New Jersey, and Robert H. Merring of Irvington, New Jersey, were united in marriage Saturday, July 30th, at St. Luke's Episcopal Church in Rozelle, that date being the birthday of the bride.

Previous to her marriage, Mrs. Merring held a secretarial position with the Waterman Pen Co. Mr. Merring, who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Merring of Rathbone holds a position with the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey.

After a wedding trip and stay of two weeks at Sea Girt, they are now residing in Cranford, New Jersey.

Mrs. Willard Hotaling is a patient at the Corning hospital where she will undergo an operation.

Republican Paper Predicts Stalker Victory in Primaries

Congressman Gale H. Stalker will carry Tioga County in the Republican primaries next Tuesday by a substantial majority. It is conceded that Mr. Stalker has given this district excellent representation during the ten years he has served. Whenever he has been appealed to for assistance he has gone out of his way to help constituents. Congressman Stalker is regarded and admired as a man with the courage of his convictions. He has established a record for economy in government. He reduced his salary by his own vote. Mr. Stalker is now at th eheight of his influence and usefulness in Congress; he has had the experience; he has strong and favorable connections in Congress; is on powerful committees; he is not chairman of any committee because no Republican can be committee chairman under the Democrats who elected a Democratic Speaker and organized the House. For the good of the district Mr. Stalker should be and will be re-nominated and elected.

The Cole campaign advertisements stress the fact that Mr. Stalker has served in Congress for ten years, to which the Stalkerites offer the snappy rejoinder that candidate Cole's father has been on the public payroll for about twenty years and that he is now drawing a salary of approximately $12,000 a year from the State of New York, that candidate's Cole's brother, Robert, is now holding a political job and that Candidate Cole and his wife both were on the state payroll until a year ago when they removed from Albany to Bath, N. Y.

The Cole faction argue that Mr. Stalker has been in Congress long enough and Stalker supporters reply that Mr. Stalker's experience both as a candidate and as a successful business man is a principal factor to his credit. In this connection they claim that Mr. Cole is lacking in business experience and that his whole business career consists of about a year's stand practicing law and in attending to his duties as secretary of the Cunningham Natural Gas Corporation, a corporation operating in the Wayne natural gas field.

Then too there seems to be a difference of opinion as to how wet Mr. Cole really is. It has been noised about the district that Mr. Cole is wet, but Dr. W. E. Barron of Addison, N. Y., has got to be shown. In an advertisement appearing in last Sunday's Elmira Telegram he calls on Mr. Cole to state where he would stand as to a change in the Volstead law favoring legalized beer. The doctor is also inquisitive about Mr. Cole's stand on the immediate payment of the soldiers' bonus.

Mr. Stalker received the following letter from Congressman Pratt, of Highland, N. Y., which is self-explanatory:

Highland, N. Y., Sept. 7, 1932
Honorable Gale H. Stalker,
Member of Congress,
Elmira, New York.
My dear Gale:

I am in receipt of a letter from W. F. Wilcox, Chairman, Tompkins County Branch, Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, which reads in part as follows:

"The wet Republicans of this district are trying to defeat Congressman Stalker in the primaries. My part is to write up his record for the press. If you will give me any information about his record or reputation with the other New York Members, that will be helpful.

"I hope I am right in believing that you are in sympathy with my object. If so, perhaps, you will express your opinion of the Jones-

PRIMARY ELECTION

Next Tuesday will be Primary day for all parties. On that day all good citizens should go out to the polls and register their preference for party candidates. Only in that way can the electorate truly choose the men for governmental affairs who will truly represent the majority.

Some twenty odd years ago there was a distinct fight waged to give the people the privilege to nominate candidates for election through direct primaries instead of in the old conventions. Advocates of the direct primary system pointed out truthfully enough, that the nominees at conventions were often not the candidates the people wished to vote into office. They said when nominations could be made by direct ballot of the entire electorate, then and then only could the people express a real preference at the polls.

It sounded logical and finally the direct primary system became legal in New York, as well as the majority of other states, as a means of nominating many candidates for office. The theory was right, always, the only failure in the system has been the human equation, whereby the voters have failed to avail themselves of the franchise right in the primaries. The only way to correct the failure in our primary system, is for the citizens from all walks of life to go to the polls on primary day and register their preference for a candidate.

Next Tuesday's general primary election offers to every citizen a privilege and a duty. Good government demands that the best candidates obtainable be selected to run for all offices. The only way the people can work for good government is to go to the polls, search their consciences and vote for the best man seeking office. Staying at home and condemning officeholders on the street will not help one whit. The ballot is the citizens' one and only power, but exercised in the primary it is a great force which can be directed to bringing better government.

Vote next Tuesday for the candidates you wish to see hold office .

FOUR FACTS FOR FARMERS

In a recent statement to members of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association, President Sexauer of that organization pointed out some facts that are of interest to farmers throughout the nation.

First, milk prices were maintained at reasonably good levels by organized dairymen long after other prices had collapsed.

Second, milk prices would still be at relatively high levels if the dairymen gave their cooperative stronger support.

Third, the interest of ALL dairymen in a territory cannot be protected until they are united in a single organization.

Fourth, every member of the cooperative consequently has personal responsibility to bring the facts of the case before his friends and neighbors, and show them the benefits that come from cooperative action.

These statements are facts, not theories. If the farmers in the New York Milk Shed—as well as almost all other farmers—are suffering from bankrupt prices, it is because they failed to stand solidly behind their cooperative. The unorganized farmer is like a rabbit—he has no means of defense.

In New York the Dairymen's League is making a valiant effort to perfect its organization, and unite the farmers in its territory in a fight for the common good. As that effort succeeds or fails, the dairymen will succeed or fail. Producers in every state are watching events in the Milk Shed, knowing that what is taking place there is not only of local significance, but will vitally affect agriculture as a whole.

WHY BUSINESS BRIGHTENS

Production in many major lines is not sufficient to take care of replacement and commodity stocks in the hands of dealers are lower than they have been for years. At the low rate of operation in the steel industry, it is estimated that more steel is rusting away than is being produced. With such a condition with respect to steel, the wear and tear on other products, equipment and buildings there is piling up a demand for replacements sufficient to put every plant and idle employee back to work.

REPEALING LAWS

It is strange with all the violation of the law against kidnapping, that some "sob society" does not take up the battle axe and DEMAND that the kidnapping laws be repealed. We are told that flagrant disregard for law undermines our system of justice, therefore such a law should be repealed to make citizens more respectful of the laws which remain upon the statute books.

Certainly the laws which in any way hinder the activities of kidnappers, are unpopular—with them, at least. Strangely, however, the victims of kidnapping activities desire that more stringent laws be passed against this lucrative sport of the underworld.

The reason a widespread effort has not been made to write the kidnapping laws off the books, is due to the fact the idle rich are the ones who fall frequent victims to the kidnappers. On the other hand the idle rich are the ones who desire to see Prohibition repealed, because it interferes with their desire to obtain more liquor with less trouble.

The laws against kidnapping of course, should be made stronger instead of repealed, just as the laws punishing the violator of the Eighteenth Amendment should be given uglier teeth that would really hurt those who connive to defeat them. It is senseless to repeal either, as senseless to repeal one as the other. Both are unpopular with the undesirable class of people who consider personal liberty a thing that should be guaranteed them individually, whether or not their acts infringed upon the comfort and well being of other persons.

The Eighteenth Amendment came into being because the liquor traffic has always been an outlaw at heart, ready to step out of the bounds of the law whenever that course offered greatest profit. The effort being made on a wide front to restore legalized traffic in this industry is fathered, mothered, sponsored and financed by the liquor interests who have found their millions tied up by this law they have now been working hard to make unpopular.

America must go forward, not backward, and protect its citizens from those who would despoil them.

NO RELIEF IN DEMOCRACY

In his letter to Hon. John Garner, advising him that he had been nominated as the Democratic candidate for Vice President, Senator Barkley said:

"The ill fate which has overtaken our country in recent years and still hangs over it like a lowering cloud, for which the incompetency and leadership of the Republican party is largely responsible, calls again to the Democratic party for guidance and control."

The use of the word "again" in the last clause of this sentence excites moderate curiosity. Can the distinguished Senator point out any time in the past when this country turned to the Democratic party to lead it out of hard times?

Since the organization of the Republican party the Democratic party has never won a victory except when times were good.

In periods of deep distress the country never yet has called upon the Democratic party to help it out of trouble.

There is a reason. If you want to know what that reason is, review the measures of legislation the Democratic party sponsored during the late session of Congress and see what would have happened to this country if the Democratic party had been in complete control of the Government this year— a pork barrel of unparalleled dimensions, the Government put into the business of lending money direct to individuals, bond issues of 3 to 5 billions with corresponding increase in taxation, 2½ billions of fiat money with inevitable depreciation of the dollar and loss of the gold standard, reduction of the tariff so as to permit European countries to pay us what they owe us in goods and produce which would have meant flooding our markets with foreign grown farm products and foreign made commodities. These are some of the things Democratic control of the Government would have meant this year. Is it likely the country will fly to them next year in hope of "relief?"

INEFFICIENCY NOT PRACTICAL

Really practical people put first things first. They do not allow anxiety to interfere with any right activity. They do the right thing at the right time, not the right thing at the wrong time. In view of this it seems strange that Martha, the sister of Mary of Bethany, is so often held up as a model of the practical woman. The facts are against this. For the record tells that, when the Lord Jesus Christ came to the home of Martha and Mary, "Martha was cumbered about much serving", and complained to her guest that her sister, who "sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his word," was not helping her as she should but had left her to serve alone. The Son of God could not be mistaken in his estimate of persons, and instead of commending Martha for being practical and efficient, he rebuked her for being impractical and inefficient, while he commended Mary for putting first things first. "Martha, Martha, thou art careful (anxious) and troubled about many things: but one thing is needful: and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her".—Sunday School Times.

THE VOICE OF AUTHORITY

Success is always exciting; we never grow tired of asking what and how. What, then, were the principal elements in Jesus' power over men? How was it that the boy from a country village became the greatest leader?

First of all he had the voice and manner of the leader — the personal magnetism which begets loyalty and commands respect. The beginnings of it were present in him even as a boy. John felt them.

On the day when John looked up from the river where he was baptizing converts and saw Jesus standing on the bank, he drew back in protest. "I have need to be baptized of thee," he exclaimed, "and comest thou to me?"

The lesser man recognized the greater instinctively. We speak of personal magnetism as though there were something mysterious about it—a magic quality bestowed on one in a thousand and denied to all the rest. This is not true. The essential element in personal magnetism is a consuming sincerity—an overwhelming faith in the importance of the work one has to do.

Most of us go through the world mentally divided against ourselves. We wonder whether we are in the right jobs, whether we are making the right investments, whether, after all, anything is as important as it seems to be. Our enemies are those of our own being and creation. Instinctively we wait for a commanding voice for one who shall say authoritatively, "I have the truth. This way lies happiness and salvation." There was in Jesus supremely that quality of conviction.

Even very successful people were moved by it. Jesus had been in Jerusalem only a day or two when there came a knock at his door at night. He opened it to find Nicodemus, one of the principal men of the city; a member of the Sanhedrin, a supreme court judge. One feels the dramatic quality of the meeting—the young, almost unknown, teacher and the great man, half curious, half convinced.

It would have been easy to make a mistake. Jesus might very naturally have expressed his sense of honor at the visit; have said: "I appreciate your coming, sir. You are an older man and successful. I am just starting on my work. I should like to have you advise me as to how I may best proceed. But there was no such note in the interview—no effort to make it easy for this notable visitor to become a convert. One catches his breath involuntarily at the audacity of the speech:

"Verily, verily, I say to you, Nicodemus, except you are born again you can not see the kingdom of Heaven." And a few moments later, "If I have not told you earthly things and you have not believed, how shall you believe if I tell you heavenly things?"

The famous visitor did not enroll as a disciple, was not invited to enroll; but he never forgot the impression made by the young man's amazing self-assurance. In a few weeks the crowds along the shores of the Sea of Galilee were to feel the same power.

Sunday School Lesson

by Rev. Charles E. Dunn,

Lesson for September 18:
The Reports of the Spies
Numbers 13 and 14
Golden Text: Psalm 27 :1

The Israelites were now in the wilderness of Paran, when Moses is commanded by the Lord to select twelve men, one from each tribe, to make a tour of inspection of the promised land. Thus was inaugurated one of the earliest geographical expeditions in history. These scouts made a thorough investigation of both the land's fertile areas and its barren wastes. Their report was comprehensive, but not unanimous.

Rev. Chas. E. Dunn

Ten of the spies, while admitting that the land was very rich, nevertheless counseled against attempted conquest. "All the people we saw there," they insisted, "were men of huge size. They made us feel like grasshoppers." (Moffat's version."

But Caleb and Joshua, who gave the minority report, were made of sterner stuff. "We ought to march up at once," they cried, "and seize the land."

Note the grit of this sturdy pair. They had plenty of nerve to oppose a verdict of comrades who greatly outnumbered them. Never was such courage more needed. We are all tempted to follow the crowd like silly sheep. How few will think through for themselves the profound issues at stake in the coming election, and vote accordingly! Most voters will flock to the band-wagon of that candidate whom they think is most likely to win.

Secondly, consider the exploring spirit of Caleb and his companion, their penchant for adventure. The Jews were a great exploring people. Now opportunities for travel are very limited for most of us. But we can cultivate our minds. We can develop a hobby.

Finally, these men had the confidence of victory. They knew that they were right, that time was on their side. The people, in despair, scorned their advice, and yearned for Egypt. But Caleb and Joshua stuck to their guns, and lived to see their judgment vindicated. Under Joshua the children of God did enter Canaan.

You and I desperately need, in this time of fear and doubt, such confidence in the future triumph of the right. When disheartened let us say, with Gladstone, "I appeal to time."

Mayor Walker's resignation under fire has not affected his popularity with the average New Yorker. New York people take a cynical view of political graft. The man in the street honestly believes that every public official from the President down is in politics to make money for himself, and the disclosure of huge sums paid to the Mayor of New York just makes the average voter think that he is a pretty smart guy.

It is probably that Mayor Walker will run for re-election, and my belief at the present time is that if he does he will be re-elected. New York is full of people whose suppressed desire is to be an irresponsible playboy of Broadway, and they may envy and admire "Jimmy" because he plays that role so successfully.

It is all very well to talk about getting rid of undesirable public officials and putting good men in office, but the rank and file of the voting population has to be reckoned with, and the rank and file is never greatly interested in the reform government.

TODAY AND TOMORROW

FRANK PARKER STOCKBRIDGE

FUNDAMENTALS for families

I met an old friend the other day in an old New England village. The last time I had seen him he was earning $15,000 a year—and spending it—in Chicago. The slump broke him; he lost his job, his home, everything but what little he could raise as a loan on his life insurance.

"I've bought a little farm up here", he told me. "I'm the luckiest man in the world, because my wife has sound common sense. It was her idea for us to get back to the soil and live on next to nothing until things get better.

We're raising a lot of our food. wearing out our old clothes working from sunup to dark—and the funny part of it is that we like it. The children think it's wonderful. Our health is better than ever, we don't owe a cent, and while we're not laying up anything yet, and haven't any luxuries, we've got all the fundamentals of comfortable existence. And what else does anybody need?"

That man has the world by the tail.

BOOKS—good friends

A publisher friend sent me the other day, twelve books. "I'm getting these out to sell for fifteen cents a copy", he wrote. "I've got an idea that millions of people have never had a chance to read the great works of the great writers, and I'm going to try to supply them".

Whether he makes a business success or not, he is doing a valuable service. He has shown good judgment in selecting the books to reprint. "The Way of All Flesh" is, I think, the greatest novel ever written in the English language. And the list includes many others which are as interesting the second or the tenth time of reading, such as Green Mansions", "Alice in Wonderland", "Tom Sawyer", "Under the Greenwood Tree", "Treasure Island" and the New Testament, to name but a few.

Good books were never cheaper nor more widely available than they are today. And there is no better companion, no sounder source of culture, no keener stimulus to the imagination than a great book.

EXILE—there's Typhoid Mary

In a little cottage on North Island in the East River, near New York, lives a woman in her sixties who is kept in seclusion because she is a menace to the pubic health. She herself in in perfect health, but she is a "typhoid carrier".

"Typhoid Mary", as this woman is known, was a cook. Wherever she worked, people who ate the food she handled came down with typhoid fever. Fifty-seven cases, some of them fatal, were traced directly to her!

Individualists who think nobody should be restrained for any cause sometimes protest against isolation of "Typhoid Mary". She objected at first, but now is reconciled to living the rest of her days in comfort at public expense. Her case illustrates the fact that the good of the whole social organization is more important than the liberty of the individual.

OYSTERS—here again

Oysters farmers are expecting a bigger and better crop than ever this year. The oyster of the Atlantic Coast is always a surprise to the visitor from the Patific, who is familiar only with the small native oysters out there. It is also a source of amusement to European visitors, who have nothing like it.

It is related of William M. Thackery, the famous English author, that on his first and only visit to America he was served with oysters on the half shell and didn't know what to do with them. He asked his host how to eat them and was told that they should be swallowed whole.

"I feel as if I had swallowed a live baby", he said, after he had gulped the first one down.

Some kind-hearted ladies are trying to get oyster dealers to use anesthetics before opening the oysters so as not to give the oyster pain. That, it seems to me, is carrying sentimentality a little beyond the bounds of common sense.

Repubican State Convention To Be Held In Buffalo Oct. 3 and 4

Albany, Sept 13—The Republican State Convention will be held this fall at the Broadway Auditorium in Buffalo on October 3 and 4, convening at 11 o'clock on the former date. Time and place were chosen by the Republican State Committee at a large end enthusiastic meeting in New York last Thursday. The first day, as usual, will be devoted to preliminaries, and on the 4th the platform will be adopted and the ticket named. In presenting the matter of a date to the members Chairman Macy said he saw no virtue in the policy generally followed of holding the convention early and giving the Democrats the advantage of knowing the Republican set-up in advance. The committee agreed with this view and fixed the latest possible time, since the nomination must be filed in Albany by midnight on the 4th. The Democratic Convention will be held in this city on the same dates.

An Abundance of Material

Though efforts have been made to build up a demand for one or two of them, public opinion so far does not seem to have centered on any one of the half dozen persons mentioned as candidates for Governor on the Republican ticket. These include Speaker Joseph A. McGinnies of Chautauqua County, Judge Daniel J. Kenefick of Buffalo, Mayor Rolland Marvin of Syracuse, Col. William J. Donovan of New York, George U. Harvey President of Queens Borough, New York City, and F. Trubee Davison of Nassau County, Assistant Secretary of War. George Fearon, Temporary President of the Senate, is frequently mentioned, but says he is not a candidate and will support Mayor Marvin. Many feel former Governor Miller should be the nominee, as even the Democrats have now been compelled to acknowledge the wisdom of the economy policy which he introduced when in the chair. At any rate there is plenty of good material, and it has been the policy of the party leaders that the nomination should not be foreclosed in favor of any one, in order that the strongest man may be named at the Convention.

In the Democratic Camp

The Democrats have narrowed their discussion of candidates to two. Governor Roosevelt and his campaign managers want Lieut. Gov. Lehman nominated. The Albany County organization is promoting Mayor Thacher of this city and in that has had the support of a considerable part of New York City as well as several up-state counties. Senator Wagner and some others have been mentioned, but they are not likely to figure unless there is such a bitter fight between the Roosevelt and anti-Roosevelt factions that it is felt best to pass over both Lehman and Thacher and pick a dark horse.

Romancing Away from Home

The author of "Alice in Wonderland" was an amateur compared with Franklin D. Roosevelt when he gets a few miles from home. Even so near as Connecticut he told a story which caused those who know his record here in Albany to gasp with astonishment. Many of his statements will not stand the test, and some of them were so flagrant it is not fair to let them pass.

The Roosevelt "Economy"

Mr. Roosevelt told the Connecticut people he had "championed economy in State government costs in New York." The fact is that every year since Mr. Roosevelt became Governor the Republican Legislature has pared down the budget he sent in. Last year it made the deepest cut of all and reduced it over $21,000,000, from $323,000,000 to $302,000,000. For this the Republicans in the Legislature were bitterly attacked by the Governor and the Democratic members. Despite these facts, the Governor boldly claimed credit before the Connecticut people for "cutting millions off the tax budget in 1932."

Spending Record for all Time

During Mr. Roosevelt's three years in office expenses have increased each year over the previous one an average of $32,000,000, or more than twice as much as under Governor Smith. In the same time the bonded debt increased from $355,000,000 when he took office to $444,000,000 on June 30 last. On that date the State also had temporary debts of $135,000,000 for money borrowed in anticipation of expected revenues, making a total indebtedness on June 30 of $579,000,000. Even deducting the money in the sinking fund, the net debt of the State at the start of the recent fiscal year was over $463,000,000. Surely the people of Connecticut do not desire that kind of "economy".

This Week in Washington

BY RADFORD MOBLEY

AUTOCASTER WASHINGTON BUREAU

Washington, D. C., Sept 12—With the worst of the hot weather over, tourists are beginning to flock into Washington in larger numbers than at any other time since last spring. There have not been so many of them here this past summer as usual. Fewer people have had the money with which to take vacation trips. But there are never less than a million outside visitors to Washington annually, and some years the number has run to nearly double that figure.

One experience which every stranger visiting Washington always enjoys is to go to the top of the Washington Monument. Five hundred and fifty-five feet from its base to its solid aluminum tip, the Washington Monument is still the highest spot in the city, and from it the visitor gets a birds-eye view of the entire District of Columbia and the adjacent hills of Maryland and Virginia.

The monument stands exactly on the meridian of Washington which is exactly 77 degrees, 3 minutes and 57 seconds west of Greenwich, England, which is the point from which longitude is calculated. It is as nearly as possible the exact geographic center of the tract, ten miles square, which was laid out as the Federal District in George Washington's time. A line drawn north and south through the monument would pass through the middle of the White House, and also Sixteenth Street, the upper end of which is known as Meridian Hill.

The monument is no longer the center of the district, however, because in the 1840's the part lying on the Virginia side of the Potomac River was given back to that state, so that the District of Columbia now, instead of containing one hundred square miles, is only about sixty-four square miles in area.

That High Water Mark

This monument to George Washington was begun about 1830 by an association which got contributions from the public, but ran out of funds when the structure had reached the height of about 150 feet. It stood there unfinished for forty years, as a blot on the landscape of the capital city, until Congress appropriated money for its completion. It was finished in 1885, with stone from the same quarry from which the lower part had been built. In the meantime, so much other stone had been taken out of that quarry that the new stone does not match the old, and the very distinct line, about a third of the way up the monument, where the darker stone ends and the lighter stone begins, is a perpetual reminder of the forty years' delay in its completion.

In the spring of 1889 floating ice in the river jammed against the railroad bridge, forming a dam which diverted all of the water of the river into the city and men and boys rowed up and down Pennsylvania Avenue in boats from the Treasury to the Capitol grounds for two or three days.

Occasionally, an old Washingtonian, when asked by a stranger how to account for the line across the Washington Monument where the stone changes color, replies that is the high mark of the flood of 1889!

The Capitol Building

Next to the Washington Monument, the principal point of attraction for visitors is the Capitol Buildings. It is possible for those who are sufficiently active to climb up a narrow winding iron stairway, concealed between the castiron dome and the ceiling of the rotunda, and stand at the very foot of the Statue of Liberty. Most visitors, however, content themselves with remaining on the main floor, viewing the historical paintings around the walls and on the great ceiling of the circular rotunda, which is 150 feet across, and strolling through the wings on either side of the halls in which the Senate and the House of Representatives hold their sessions.

These two wings are much younger than the main building. The Senate, in the early days of the nation used to meet in the comparatively small room in which the Supreme Court has held its sessions for the last hundred years, while the House of Representatives sat for half a century or more in what is now Statuary Hall, which has one of the most famous whispering galleries in the world.

There is a certain point at which the visitor can stand on one side of Statuary Hall and speak in a whisper which can be distinctly heard by anyone standing in a corresponding position, at the other side, more than one hundred feet away.

Guarded Craftsmen

Almost every Washington visitor wants to see "the place where they make the money." The Bureau of Engraving and Printing is the largest plant in the world devoted to printing by what is known as the steel engraving process. The plates from which money, postage stamps and government bonds are printed are engraved on steel, which is then hardened until it cannot be cut even by a diamond, and from these plates money is printed on hand presses, requiring extremely skillful operators.

Visitors are admitted to a closely guarded gallery from which they can look through heavy bars and watch the money printers at work. Every sheet of paper has to be accounted for at the beginning and ending of each day's work, and the employees who actually handle the paper and printed money are not allowed to wear the same clothes in the workroom that they wear to and from work.

The Secret Service Museum in the Treasury Department, in which specimens of counterfeit money and plates and presses captured by the Secret Service men are kept, is no longer open to the public. The most ingenious counterfeiter, although not the most dangerous, has been dead for a great many years, but the Secret Service still has many specimens of his work. He did not use plates or presses at all, but would bleach out a dollar bill, and with pen and ink draw a hundred dollar bill on the bleached out paper so perfectly that he had no trouble in passing them on banks all over the country. He never could earn more than $100 a week at this trade. If the Secret Service men had ever been able to catch him there was a job waiting for him in the Treasury Department at a higher salary than that, so expert was he in drawing the intricate designs which make American money difficult to counterfeit.

After Lost Laurels

Max Schmeling, German heavyweight and former world champion, returns to the U. S. for a battle with Mickey Walker, his first start since losing the title to Jack Sharkey of Boston. Max thinks he can regain his crown.

Several Thousand Farmers Will Make War Against Rats

The farmers of Steuben County will enlist on October 31 for a one-day battle against rat pests, mankind's most destructive mammal. Many thousands of dollars' loss every year is caused by rats in Steuben County, and rats are found on almost every farm. Rats yearly destroy or consume property worth at least two dollars for every rat. They cause diseases and menace health. No one wants these pests about the premises.

Mr. William Stempfle, County Agent of Steuben County Farm Bureau, is directing the local drive. The campaign will be conducted according to a plan perfected by the Biological Survey, United States Department of Agriculture. The bait that will be used is also prepared under the supervision of this Federal Bureau. In each community in the county, there will be a local distributor to handle the bait for his community.

The method to be used will make it easy for everyone to get rid of his rats with little effort and expense. Three kinds of bait will be furnished—namely, fresh hamburg, fish and cereal—so that all rats will find at least one of them to their liking. To each of these three baits will be added the new raticide, powdered red squill. If the baits are used according to directions, they will not normally kill dogs, cats, poultry, or human beings, only rats and house mice. The material has been perfected by the United States Biological Survey and is the safest and best rat poison known to science.

Each package of prepared bait contains enough material to rid the average farm or business premises of rats, making about 100 small baits. There is nothing more to add, simply expose the baits in small pieces about the premises that are infested. Full instructions for using the baits will be included in every package.

Under a cooperative arrangement, the baits will be furnished at wholesale cost, making the special campaign price of 50 cents. Baits will be furnished to anyone in the county, but it is necessary to reserve the bait in advance. To be sure of getting baits, write or telephone the office of the Steuben County Farm Bureau.

Rats are highly migratory, so it is hoped that everyone will cooperate to free Steuben County of rats on October 31. Interest your neighbor, talk rats every place you go from now until October 31. The elimination of rats from the entire community can be accomplished only by organized effort.

REPUBLICANS—YOUR PARTY NEEDS A CHANGE

Do not nominate Gale H. Stalker again. He is vulnerable. He has been congressman for ten years and his efforts have been futile. His influence in Washington is limited to his vote, and that single vote has been missing on much important legislation.

Mr. Stalker displays, for campaign purposes, conventional letters from party leaders, similar to those sent to other party members. He is invited, along with 1200 other Republican officeholders in Washington, to the White House.

BUT No Congressman from this district in 50 years has been of such little consequence in Washington. Other Republican and Democratic congressmen from this district received instant recognition because of their ABILITY, some in their first terms and others in their second terms. Republican Congressmen Houghton, Dwight, Fassett, Pratt, Gillett served on important committees although none of them remained in the House as long as Mr. Stalker. Compare their accomplishments with those of Gale H. Stalker, who although he is completing ten years in Congress has not impressed himself favorably enough on his Republican colleagues to receive appointment on any major standing committee or the chairmanship of any committee, important or otherwise.

The people all over the country are demanding a new deal in Congress. Nominate Sterling Cole and send new blood to Washington. Line up with the rest of the country!

Gale H. Stalker was A.W.O.L. (absent without leave) July 13, 1932, when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill that checked the panic and started the nation on the slow but certain road to recovery was passed.

During the closing week of the last Congress Mr. Stalker was frantically sought by Republican leaders to help maintain the narrow Republican administration margin.

Congressman Stalker followed the leadership of Congressman McFadden, one of Pres. Hoover's arch political opponents, on the Federal Home Loan bill, which was drawn to make funds available to relieve mortgage covered small homes.

HOW MUCH LONGER, REPUBLICANS?

Line up with the rest of the country and put new blood in Congress. Send Sterling Cole to Congress. He is able, honorable, progressive.

Sterling Cole is a regular Republican and will cooperate with the Republican leadership. Gale H. Stalker is a factional candidate.

REPUBLICANS, HERE IS YOUR CHANCE!!! Help America by electing a MAN OF ABILITY.

NOMINATE STERLING COLE FOR CONGRESS.

The Stalker forces will vote this year at the Primary as they have in the past. The only way Republicans can nominate and elect a regular Republican congressman in place of a factional Republican congressman is GO TO THE POLLS AND VOTE, Tuesday, Sept. 20 from 12 noon to 9 P. M. and

Colgate President Commends W. S. Cole

Sterling Cole, of Bath, has received the following letter from Dr. George B. Cutten, president of Colgate University, and former pastor of the First Baptist Church of Corning:

"Dear Mr. Cole—

"It has just come to my attention that you have announced your candidacy for Congress from your local district and of course I am exceedingly pleased to hear it. One criticism I have of our colleges is that they have failed to impress their graduates with the responsibility they have in connection with their citizenship; and whenever I hear of any of our men taking an active interest in politics, I feel more definitely that the college is performing a needed function. When young men, such as you, of ability and integrity desire to assume such responsibilities, it gives me great hope for the future, for I am sure that such qualities are inevitable in the near future.

"With all good wishes for your success, I remain,

"Most sincerely yours,
"George B. Cutten."

CULLING

By Prof. H. D. Munroe

There is a tendency among poultrymen and farmers to become careless about the management of their poultry flock during the summer when egg prices are low. It is at this time that the greatest care should be taken.

Management problems that effect summer egg production are lice and mites, mash consumption and culling.

Even with low egg prices it is possible to have a profit on a flock if egg production is maintained above fifty per cent. Heavy production can be maintained during the summer only by culling.

Summer culling is a very simple process. It can be done most conveniently at night. Once a week the careful poultryman should look over his flock of layers and remove and sell any hen that has stopped laying. With Leghorn flocks this can be done at night, using a flashlight. Any hen with a dry shrunken comb should be removed from the flock. In the morning go over these birds more carefully and sell all that have stopped laying.

With the heavy breeds there are several points that will help in night culling. Birds that have little or no feed in their crops should be removed. Probably the best way to handle a flock of heavy breeds is to mark each hen when she goes broody with a colored leg band. The second or third time that he goes broody sell her.

A flock of laying hens in good production is profitable under present conditions.

Straining sour milk for cottage cheese requires only one pair of hands if the edges of the cloth are fastened to the sides of the kettle with clothespins. Embroidery hoops sometimes save scalded hands by holding a jelly bag open at the right stage in jelly making.

Chemung County

"Word from all over the district convinces me that Mr. Stalker is now serving his last term as Republican congressman," said A. Marshall Lowman of Elmira today. "Sterling Cole has made such a very favorable impression wherever he has gone that Republicans on all sides are saying that here at last is our opportunity to nominate a congressman who will truly represent the district.

"Chemung county will be the hardest in the district to swing entirely into the Cole column, and while the surge of sentiment is strongly away from Stalker and toward Cole I want to be conservative and merely state that the Stalker majority of two years ago against Mr. Oldfield will be at least cut in half. From all parts of Chemung comes the word that this district should get in step with the rest of the Republicans of the nation, who are defeating in the primaries so many of the oldtimers in Washington and substituting men who are in step with the times. The Stalker vote always comes to the polls; if the anti-Stalker Republicans come to vote Stalker will be beaten Tuesday."

Steuben County

"During the past two weeks I have visited nearly every one of the 32 towns of Steuben county", said Frank R. Aulls, former chairman of the Republican county committee today, "and I believe I am conservative when I predict a majority of 4,000 for Sterling Cole in Steuben in next Tuesday's primary election. I know this county well, for I have covered it many times in behalf of the Republican party during the last 25 years. Our party in Steuben county is through with Mr. Stalker. We want a congressman in Washington who can make a favorable impression, and we have such a candidate in Sterling Cole. Steuben county will give him a majority of at least 4,000 next Tuesday."

Schuyler County

"Schuyler county is ready for a change in Republican congressmen' said Edward Lowman, former chairman of the Board of Supervisors of that county this morning. "Those of us who are in touch with conditions here are convinced that the enrolled Republicans want to put new blood in congress. Sterling Cole can count on a majority of a few hundred. The vote will not be large, because there are only 4,000 enrolled Republicans, but more Cole votes will be cast than Stalker votes."

Tompkins County

"Two years ago Tompkins county, in the Oldfield-Stalker promary battle, was carried by Gale Stalker by about 1,600 votes, but the story will be different next week," declared County Judge Charles Blood and Rodney Robinson jointly yesterday. "Both the city of Ithaca and the town of Tompkins have been most favorably impressed by Sterling Cole, who has spent much time here, and there is not the slightest doubt in my mind that Mr. Cole will defeat Mr. Stalker in Tompkins county by several hundred. The people here are aroused to the need of a change, the same popular demand that has been shown by direct primary vote to exist in so many Republican districts in the nation." Rodney Robinson is state committeeman.

Tioga County

"Republicans of Tioga county have supported Gale H. Stalker in other campaigns, but a change in sentiment has come over the people here", declared the Hon. James Truman of Owego yesterday. "I hear very many men and women who have always voted for Mr. Stalker declare that they intend to vote for Sterling Cole. There is every opportunity for Sterling Cole to carry the county."

HOW I BECAME A RADIO STAR

By LANNY ROSS

NECESSITY, always the mother of resourcefulness, started me on my career as a professional singer. My father and mother had put me on a train for Vancouver, B. C., and school at the age of six. I promptly spent my dinner money for a toy.

"Boy, you'll have to sing for your supper tonight," the conductor remarked facetiously.

I took him seriously, mounted a seat at the end of the dining-car, and sang the popular automobile song of the day, "Get Out and Get Under." I sang other songs too, and passed the hat. As a result, I got supper, breakfast, and left the train in Canada with $1.65 in my pocket.

Even after that first flush of financial success, I didn't intend to sing my way through life. True, I was soloist on the glee clubs of my preparatory school, Taft, in Watertown, Connecticut, and of Yale University, but I was studying for my arts degree as well.

Now that radio has given me an auspicious start in life, I suppose I can attribute the opportunity to the leisure I had in college with the chance it gave me to cultivate my voice and acquire some experience through a wide variety of appearances with the University Glee Club. I traveled all over the country with that organization, as well as to Bermuda, Nassau and Europe.

In fact, I turned down a chance to become a member of the American Olympic track team in 1928 and to compete in the games at Amsterdam so that I might tour Europe with the Yale Glee Club. It was a difficult decision to make, but I finally came to the conclusion that if I were going to take this singing business seriously, I had better run around with singers than with quarter-milers. Incidentally, competing with foreign athletes was no novelty to me, for I had been a member of the Yale-Harvard track team which had defeated Oxford and Cambridge in England the previous year.

One of my prized possessions today is a scroll notifying me that I had been elected an honorary member of the American Olympic Team of that year. One of my best friends is Ray Barbuti, the star Syracuse quarter-miler, who won the Olympic 400-meter race at Amsterdam in 1928. We met seven times during our college careers, and Ray won four races and I won three. Next to my music, perhaps, is my liking for athletics, particularly track events.

From the time of my first appearance before the microphone soon after I was graduated from Yale, I have concentrated on improving my voice at the expense of all the frills and furbeloes others would substitute for vocal excellence. In this respect, I might again answer a question frequently asked me. Am I a crooner? Frankly, I am not. If I were one, I would admit it.

What is a croon? Nothing but a lullaby. When a tenor, a baritone, or a bass singer sings softly, he is crooning.

I have been in radio a little more than four years, and it goes without saying I enjoy it immensely.

My success on the program has enabled me to study law at Columbia University, from which I now have a degree. I consider law an "ace in the hole" which I will always have, should I suddenly, for some reason or other, decide to leave the radio field.

A More Complete Story of Mr. Oldfield's Pudding

Records of earnings and expenses of the County Clerk's office during Mr. Oldfield's administration as given in the annual report of the County Treasurer, and published in the proceedings of the Board of Supervisors:

Total for 8 years	$185.090.31
Total earnings	$207,803.59
Total expenses	185,090.31
Net profit 8 years	$ 22,713.28

Automobile Department earnings as reported by Mr. Oldfield and included in the above:

1924—	$ 3,182.40
1925—	5,241.90
1926—	5,391.67
1927—	5,897.18
1928—	6,080.41
1929—	8,353.90
1930—	9,731.10
1931—	9,125.68
Total earnings for 8 years	$53,004.24

(Political Advertisement)

In a campaign article whose brevity adds nothing to its clarity, Mr. Oldfield professes to prove that his office has returned an average yearly profit of $7,470.73. How he has succeeded in arriving at this figure we are at a loss to understand, for the official records of the County Treasurer's Office give an entirely different result. This difference and certain conclusions to be drawn from these same records should have the full consideration of every voter in the County.

The records of the County Clerk's Office during the administration of Mr. Oldfield as they appear in the annual report of the County Treasurer are shown in the column at the left.

It will be seen from these figures that the actual profit of this office has been $22,713.28, or considerably less than half that which he himself claims. But there is much more than this mere discrepancy to be considered. Let us look further.

The revenue of the County Clerk's Office comes from two divisions: the automobile department which is under the direct supervision of the State Bureau of Motor Vehicles, and the recording department which is in Mr. Oldfield's complete charge. Now the profit of the Automobile Department during these eight years according to Mr. Oldfield's own figures amounted to $53,004.24. And yet the earnings of the entire office during this same period, as we have noted in the Treasurer's report, amounted to only $22,713.28. In other words we seem forced to conclude that while the Automobile Department (under State supervision) was returning a profit of $53,004.24, THE RECORDING DEPARTMENT OVER WHICH MR. OLDFIELD HAD COMPLETE CHARGE, SHOWED A LOSS DURING THESE EIGHT YEARS OF $30,290.96!

In the light of these figures (all of which appear in the annual records of the Board of Supervisors) the suggestion that we vote for Oldfield and keep taxes down, becomes a weird one, to say the least.

Stalker Bill or any other aspect of Mr. Stalker's work in Congress."

I am sure that the Republican members of Congress in the New York delegation are all with you, but some of the wet Democratic members may aid Mr. Wilcox in his program.

My information is that the wet Democrats are very active in assisting the wet Republicans in behalf of your opponent, Mr. Cole, and the voters of your district should be advised of this fact. The theory of the Democrats is that they cannot defeat you in the general election but they believe they could defeat your opponent.

From a brief examination of the advertisements and publicity that your opponents are using, it would seem that they are rather careless with the facts. I suppose these advertisements are paid for by the wet organizations.

You have served your district so long and faithfully, however, that I am sure they will not be misled by false propaganda.

With best wishes for your success, I am,

Sincerely yours,
H. J. Pratt, Member of Congress
27th District of New York

"The College Flapper" To Be Staged by 150 Local People

Modern, up-to-date college comedy to be played on September 15 and 16—The Flapper chorus of college girls portrayed by local business men a big feature.

On next Thursday and Friday nights the modern comedy, "The College Flapper" will be staged at the High School Auditorium under the auspices of I. O. O. F. and Rebekahs. It promises to be one of the biggest events ever staged in this community,, and includes a cast of over 150 local people. It is a modern, up-to-date college comedy with a thrilling football story. Everyone who has seen the show claims no one can afford to miss it.

The star football player of Bula Bula College is supposed to be at a special football practice, but instead is in the Sorority house making love to his girl which is entirely against the rules laid down by the coach. The coach, played by Roy Teachman sends Monk, the trainer, played by Bob Graf over to the Sorority house to find Jerry. Jerry sees him coming and knows he will be expelled from the team if caught there, so with the help of his girl, Jean, played by Dorothy Hallett and the Freshman, Bill, played by Ted Laffkas, he hides in the house-mother's room. The old housemother has left and the new one is coming the next day, and has all her clothes there and in order to sneak out of the sorority house puts on the housemother's clothes but in trying to escape is discovered in the outfit, and mistaken for the housemother. Jerry's attempt to escape from this predicament so he can play in the game brings on a series of extremely funny situations.

The Butter and Egg Man from Omaha, a wealthy alumnus of Bula Bula College played by Coral Payne while attending the homecoming visits the Sorority house and falls in love with Jerry, thinking he is the housemother. The Butter and Egg Man promises to give the college one half million dollars, but makes two conditions for the fulfillment of the promise, first that Bula Bula College win the football game, and that the housemother go to the game with him and eventually like him well enough to marry him. This puts Jerry in an impossible situation because how is he going to sit in the grandstand and still play in the game. Also, how is he going to report to the coach to play in the game without telling where he has been, and thus be expelled from the team? Jerry's effort to work out of the difficulties brings about many hilarious situations . He hobnobs with the coach while pretending to be the housemother and learns the secret signals for the game, and just as the game is ready to start he runs out on the Butter and Egg Man, makes his appearance in the last minute on the football field, persuades the coach to allow him to play and wins the game.

There are many other funny situations, Jean gets mad because he makes love to the other Sorority girls, especially Nellie, the little freshman girl, played by Esther Hewson. Professor Gaddis played by Jack Croft who has been in love with Dean Howard, played by Pearl Fowler for thirty years forsakes her and proposes to Jerry, as the housemother. George, played by Carl Rouse, and Monk, the football trainer spend a lot of time running after Jerry trying to get him over to the football field to play in the game.

The College President played by Sam Fowler and his wife played by Helen Kingsley add dignity to the cast, and the two freshmen Bill and Brick played by Ted Laffkas and Dick Hovey complete the cast.

The Butter and Egg Man is so well pleased over the game that he forgives Jerry, and donates the college one half million dollars. Professor Gaddis also forgives him and marries his first love, Dean Howard. All in all it is a screaming college comedy.

The hit of the show, the Flapper Chorus consists of men, who portray famous college girl types such as Peaches Browning, Sorority President, Spinster School Teacher, Cleopatra, famous movie stars and many other such prominent characters..

Besides the Flapper Chorus there is the Alumni Glee Club who open the show, and give a lot of entertainment singing old time songs, that everyone likes to hear. These men portray the modern college type ,and are dressed in knickers, sport sweaters and various college styles.

Another big feature of the show is the Curtain Raiser entitled "The Baby Pageant" in which over 100 children between the ages of five and seven will take part. The special dramatic reader is Albertta Evertts. She gives the reading and the children furnish a very effective background by providing some of the lines and playing parts in pantomime. The Baby Pageant is something new in entertainment and exceptionally good.

In addition to this there is the girls' chorus of high school girls, all costumed in special costumes to make the show very pretty and effective. The Milkmaid Chorus in special bright colored costumes, the Collegiate Chorus and the Sailor Breezing Along Chorus are some of the features by the girls, all specially costumed.

A full list of all the characters wil be found in an ad in this issue of the paper. Look them over. It promises to be one of the biggest shows ever staged, and is going to be well worth the price of admission.

Grow New Tomato From Old Plants

Six Years' Breeding Produces Fruits Superior to Parent That Are Similar in Size, Color and Quality.

Ithaca, N. Y., Sept. 12.—Six haploid tomato plants, or plants with fewer than the usual number of chromosomes in each cell, were discovered in the breeding plots of the Ferry-Morse seed company in 1926, and two of these plants have since given rise to two similar, productive and superior pure lines of the variety, Gordon Morrison of the Oakview breeding station of the company reported to the international genetics congress at Cornell University. Mr. Morrison was one of several representatives of commercial establishments who reported progress of investigations by private concerns, a recent development in the United States, according to congress officials.

The six unusual plants were found, three in the Marglobe variety, two in Gulf State Market, and one in Earliana. The plants were all thrifty but somewhat smaller than normal plants and the foliage was a paler green. More than 99 per cent of the pollen was shriveled and the plants were almost completely sterile. Two generations of plants have been obtained from the Marglobe. The seeds of the Gulf State Market grew three plants but these are too young to be determined as to type. The Earliana haploid seeds have not been sown.

The Marglobe is a wilt-resistant variety, with large globular fruits of superior quality. It was originally developed by the United States department of agriculture for the wilt-infested areas of the South but has been widely used and is now one of the leading commercial varieties of tomatoes.

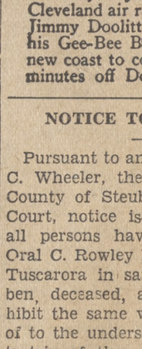
The first two haploid Marglobe fruits grew, respectively, two plants and four plants, by open pollination out-of-doors. The fruits were smaller than the usual Marglobe variety, but normal, and contained from two to twelve seeds each. Fruits set later in the greenhouse were seedless. The two plants later gave rise to ten plants and twenty-six plants in the first generation which yielded a heavy crop of full-sized fruits which are similar in all respects. One hundred plants of each parent were grown in 1931, and these also proved to be similar, normal in appearance, and excellent specimens of the Marglobe variety.

The tomato ordinarily has twelve pairs of chromosomes, or character-determining elements in the somatic cells or ordinary body cells, and has twelve un-paired chromosomes in the germ cells.

Installment Plumbing

R. B. W. asks: "Has the college of agriculture any pamphlets or plans that would help me to install running water in the kitchen? If that went well maybe I could put in a bath next year."

The department of agricultural engineering recommends your plan of installing a part of the system at a time but suggests that you make a complete plan for your plumbing system before you start; then no part will have to be taken out and replaced when you want to complete the job. We are sending you bulletin E-50, on simple water systems and plumbing. This bulletin has guided hundreds of farmers through their first steps in home plumbing and we hope the illustrations, plans and suggestions will prove useful.



THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

THE "OLD RELIABLE"

Say what we will—try out what we may—the fact remains that our old friend IODINE remains, the cheapest, most reliable, best antiseptic. The tourist with a couple of ounces of tincture of iodine in his kit, may feel absolute assurance that he has the best emergency application known for possible recent, open wounds. Indeed, no tourist-kit is complete without this time-honored, time-proven enemy of dangerous bacteria.

Let us remember that the skilled, modern surgeon, preparing to do a "capital operation," first cleanses the site of incision with soap, and water; then he swabs the entire field with tincture of iodine; then, a dash of pure grain alcohol to remove the stain—and the operation proceeds boldly and safely for the patient. Nothing can be better than perfection in antisepsis. . . .

The uses of iodine are many. Internally, iodine ranks among our first agents as a blood-alterative. It purifies bad blood by destroying the contaminating agent or agents. Iodine in the form of iodides combats the most serious of blood toxemias. I would think of iodine first, if I were to name humanity's greatest benefactor in the way of a medicine.

This week I was informed by a friend of a new use for iodine. He had acquired an acute case of sunburn, amounting almost to blisters. In agony, he took the first agent at hand. He put a teaspoonful of tincture of iodine into a glass of water and bathed the affected skin freely—"furiously," he said. He obtained immediate relief. He tried it again and again in similar conditions, always with perfect relief. Isn't that worth a trial?

I am very slow to abandon old reliable remedies for the new commercialized products.

Eleventh Installment

SYNOPSIS: Johnny Breen, 16 years old, who has spent all his life aboard a Hudson river tugboat plying near New York City, is made motherless by an explosion which sinks the tug and tosses him into the river. He swims and crawls ashore where starts a new and strange life. He is ignorant, cannot read, and knows nothing of life in a great city. . . . Beaten and chased by toughs he is rescued by a Jewish family living off the Bowery in the rear of their second-hand clothing store. . . . Here he is openly courted by the young daughter. Breen fights bullies in self-defense . . . and soon is picked up by an unscrupulous manager who cheats him—until "Pug" Malone at the saloon-fight club, attracted to the boy, takes him under his wing. . . . On the other side of the picture are the wealthy Van Horns of Fifth Avenue. There is a Gilbert Van Horn, last of the great family, a bachelor, in whose life is a hidden chapter with his mother's maid—who leaves the home—to be lost in the city life—when Gilbert is accused. . . . It was reported the maid married an old captain of a river tug . . . rather than return home—and was soon a mother. . . . Under Malone's guardianship young Breen develops fast. . . . "Pug" discovers the boy cannot read—starts him to night school and the world commences to open for Johnny Breen. . . . Malone, an old-timer, is backed in a health-farm venture—taking Breen with him. There they meet and come to know Gilbert Van Horn. John attracts Van Horn, who learns of Breen's mother, named Harriet. Learning John's desire for an engineering course at Columbia University — he advances the money. John comes to know Josephine, Van Horn's ward, and during his school years falls in love with her. Graduating as a Civil Engineer he gets a job with a great construction company, working in New York.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

"Dammit, Breen, it's all hell to get these rodmen to use their heads." The experienced engineer was speaking with authority. "We engineers got to hold 'em down," he added with conviction. John was leaving. "See you later," Malling called, and John left the exciting scene. "We engineers!" He felt a foot taller, and Monday morning seemed a year away. John was very young.

He went to his new room, unpacked the photograph of Josephine, and looked at her image long and thoughtfully. He called up Van Horn and had also talked with Josephine for a moment over the telephone. She seemed glad to hear from him. Her laugh was familiar. John remembered nothing but the laugh. Her very reticence conveyed things that seemed bound to bring them close together again. The warmth of young summer was in the air; lovers were walking in the park across the way.

Van Horn remained in the city. He just refused to leave, and Josephine, in the dark cool house in the middle Fifties, agreed with those millions who have said, "New York is a splendid summer resort."

As many people were always in or about town, and as Josephine had several insistent problems confronting her, the city, in the summer, took on the proportions of an adventure. Josephine was frankly in the business of living successfully. She had no intention of being anying but a success, and not merely a social success, but to achieve freedom, and expression, and, well, lots of other things besides. In fact she was not above the plane of experiment. The artless dropping of a fold of her crepe kimono, the closeness of her firm breasts, for an instant pink reflected light of a table lamp, beneath John's eyes, as she had bent over him, placing a tray of toast and tea upon his bed, on the morning of his convalescent luxury, happened as she planned. She recalled his quickly mounting color, her bustling of the pillow under his head, bending close above him, breathing the freshness of her morning bath. It was all so intimate, and innocent.

And John had never asked anything. It puzzled her. Boys proposed to her, almost as a matter of course. Gerrit Rantoul had proposed, and was waiting her reply.

Josephine still felt Rantoul standing over her, tall and firm and charming, his white hair a mark of distinction rather than of age. He once told her, half laughingly, "I guess I was born that way."

Rantoul was wealthy, belonged to good clubs, had offices in the financial district, and had leisure and just enough contact with great affairs to make him an entrancing companion. He was constantly meeting important men. A word or two, a mere hint, gave Josephine the feeling of mingling in a consequential world. It was so different from Gilbert Van Horn's world, a place utterly divorced from business and occupied with stupid sports, or gossip, or mooning.

Women were attracted by Rantoul, women always had been attracted to him. Charming women, Josephine knew, would take him in an instant, and he loved her. She was certain of of that, loved her intensely, with passion held in masterly reserve. He was a compelling figure. She often thought of him as a Richard Harding Davis hero, an engineer of great renown, decorated by foreign potentates. Josephine laughingly told this to Rantoul. When they dined that night at the West-Hambletons', Rantoul wore a yellow and red sash across his breast with a brilliant ten-pointed star. A sparkling order hung about his neck by a purple ribbon. On the breast of his evening coat, over his heart, was a row of overlapping medals. It was the night he proposed.

John had never proposed to her, probably never would, or perhaps had never had the chance.

Van Horn was dining at the club. It was Friday night, a beastly night by the way, with so many people always eating fish, and Aunt Wen was in the midst of a book.

John had called up only an hour before. It was six o'clock. Perhaps he was still at his new quarters. She would call, and would leave word for Rantoul, at his rooms, that she could not see him. After all, Josephine could see Rantoul often, but that night she wanted to see John Breen.

Women were attracted by Rantoul, women always had been attracted to him.

They met, an hour later, at the Savoy, and walked east, through Fifty-ninth Street to the Third Avenue L. It was a familiar station to John, in a reminiscent way, as indeed the entire city was reminiscent and crowded with surprises. The same old platforms and rails, but an electrified train carried them down through the close revealment of the East Side. Jacob Riis had written about slums, disturbingly, and Theodore Roosevelt had endorsed his words; this gave the steaming tenements a sentimental and a literary value.

"John, I'm so glad to see you, alone." Josephine was starting things early. "There's a lovely place, the Café Boulevard, so Bohemian, John, and, with you, I'm not afraid." A few weeks before Rantoul had protected her there.

John Breen might have no medals, she mused, moving closer to him, but he did have an uncanny fascination on that simmering night.

John secured a table on the balcony, ten feet or so above the crowded street, where they could dine, under the awnings, in the open air, and still in sight of the entrancing things within.

Josephine sank into her seat with a sigh, they were very fortunate indeed in getting that delightful table.

On their ride downtown, they had talked the common-places of their separation. But once at table, and alone, as if by magic, John and Josephine were again on the fatal plane of delicious intimacy.

Josephine smiled. John noted the merest suggestion of a dimple. A mood of perfect understanding seemed to permeate the air. The dinner was superb. She had asked for a cocktail and John joined her, and a bottle of St. Julien added flavor to the dishes. Café Boulevard, always famous for its coffee, outdid itself on that Arabian night. They ate their ices and lingered, while John smoked a cigar grandly, blowing fragrant clouds through the hedge as they leaned across the table tête-à-tête. Blue wreaths drifted slowly back across her hair.

"Do you mind the smoke, Jo?" He used the diminutive easily.

"No, John, I love it." Her face was close to his, her hair gave back the faintest perfume. She was even lovelier than he had imagined her in his fondest dreams; she was an angel.

As John talked Josephine was glad, so glad, to be with him. He was finer, more manly, more handsome than ever. John talked as he had never talked before. His life at the University, in the atmosphere of recognized ideas, had broadened him. He unburdened great ambitions ripe for expression in that understanding night. His surer outlook and his burning belief in the great dignity of the career ahead, glorified him. He would be a builder, "like Rantoul. Yes, like Rantoul," a builder in the greatest city of the world!

Something from within smote Josephine; it came, a cold breath of doubt. She was losing ground, slipping in a mental panic as she compared her lovers. She missed the tight, high-colored skin of the older man, youthfully flushed at times, perhaps by wine. The crisp white hair of Rantoul was less silky, and less thick, than the youthful crop of Breen, and she missed that careful guarded manner, the habit of an older man, but which she then set down to cunning. John swept her along on a flood of emotion. His hunger demanded her; it was a terrible emotion. She dared not try to fascinate or charm. Love stabbed her with delirious pain. Doubt dropped away and, in her instant of surrender, her hold on John was of transcendent power.

Rantoul vanished from her mind, and John Breen, so close across the table, clasping her hand, her pulse, her soul, was the finer man, wealthier by twenty years, rich full years she was to share with him, love with him. His grip tightened; he whispered, "Darling, will you marry me?" The question had been in his eyes. She heard the words, the fervent words carrying her beyond all thought of time or calculation.

"Will you wait for me?" his eager tones were tender. "Will you—sweetheart?"

Their eyes met, swimmingly. She whispered "Yes." Rantoul was forgotten; her plans and structures tumbled and re-formed.

They drove home in a taxi gliding quickly through dark enveloping streets. John helped her to the door, and Van Horn, who had entered a minute earlier, called to him.

"Come in, John, glad to see you. Josephine!" he called, but his ward had already disappeared in the upper hall. "What's up, John? Nothing wrong, I hope?" He looked at the young man quizzically.

"Josephine has promised to marry me." The words sounded unreal, almost as if he were uttering something sacrilegious.

"Marry you?" Gilbert Van Horn steadied himself at a newel post. "The devil you say? Come here, John." He gripped him by the hand. His eyes glistened, he turned away. "Here, Jules!" to the butler hovering in the hall, "some Cliquot, Jules! We'll have to drink to this. By gad! By gad! Kelly will like this, he will. I was afraid Rantoul had the inner track—too old, John—too old," he added, smiling and shaking his head. Gilbert Van Horn looked old, tired, as he led the way to the library. It had been a long pull. "You'll need a ring. Ring her, boy, ring her," he advised. Jules filled the glasses. "Here's good luck; Josephine and you." They stood and drank the wine in solemn silence.

"Thank you, Gil," John said simply. "How are you fixed? Money, I mean," the older man spoke with the ease of long friendship.

"I've enough," John answered; "I'll make more."

The talk of money seemed hateful to John. He was feeling let down from his period of exaltation; he wanted to get away, wanted to think.

"Good night, John, I won't come down." Van Horn held out his hand. He too wanted to be alone, to think. "Don't worry about money," he called. Josephine will have enough. It's a partnership, you know——" He waved his hand as John left, to walk uptown under the stars, up through the southern part of the park where he and Becka had tarried, and on, up to the flat opposite the shaft site. The more John walked the less certain he was of what might happen next.

Proper Feeding Prevents Early Laying Pullets From Molting

By Prof. A. G. Philips

Many pullets that were well fed early in life will commence egg production in August or early September. In all probability they were hatched in February or March. The poultryman is then confronted with the problem—"What will I do to prevent a false molt in the winter months?"

We will consider here only the type of pullet that comes into production during the two months mentioned and is undersized or smaller than we would like to have her.

This thing is true—she has become sexually mature before she has become physically mature. It means the chances are she will always be too small in size, lay too many small sized eggs in the fall and molt in the wintertime. If she attains her normal size by winter and then molts, the eggs laid in the springtime will be large in size and of good hatching quality.

The poultryman wants good size of body, a quick production of sizeable eggs, no molt with a winter check in production and good fertility in the springtime. Considering the strain of the particular breed being raised, decide on the number of pounds of weight desirable for maturing pullets. For Leghorns three and a quarter pounds and for heavier breeds five pounds is a desirable weight to be attained by the time laying commences.

If pullets are physically mature when they commence production, they will have not only reached the above-mentioned weight, but will be plump of body and carry some surplus fat internally. Pullets may commence laying without this surplus fat, and when they do, unsatisfactory results are displayed by small eggs and early molt.

If pullets are matured normally and are so fed as to retain their surplus of fat, they can perform properly during the winter. The pullet that has a tendency to be undersized when commencing to lay in August and September, must be so handled as to approach as nearly as possible the desired physical condition mentioned before in this article.

To do this, use every scheme possible to get an abundance of grain or fattening feeds into the pullets along with a minimum of mash. Keep grain in hoppers before the birds at all times when on range. Hand feed some grain in the late afternoon. If the birds eat more than one-third as much mash as grain, close the hopper in the afternoon or for half of the day. All this will tend to delay sexual maturity and build up the surplus body fat while the bird is growing. This extra fat, if maintained, will help to prevent a check in the winter production which precedes the artificial partial winter molt.

Keeping the pullets on range will help delay production. When the pullets are placed in the laying house, keep grain before them at all times and, in addition, give a wet crumbly feed of fattening mash, about three to five pounds per hundred birds daily.

This procedure will help to minimize the troubles with these precocious pullets and increase chances for success.

The Turtle of Creation

The clans of the Oneidas had reached U-na-dil-la, "the meeting place", and for six moons, the cadenced voice of the orators had echoed from the nearby hills into the hearts of the councilors and of all the gathering.

Many were the problems to be decided, the Tus-ca-roras, the "shirt-wearers" had decided to leave their village below Ah-wa-ge, "where the valley widens" and to establish new homes among the Oneidas in the "land of the large thistles", or Chenango.

At length, the last council was held under the seventh moon, and, as in ancient custom, the oldest chieftain offered the last words of wisdom, for there were many who opposed the migration of the strangers.

To reach the hearts of his people, the wise old man told the ancient story of creation and how after the first people were given all things in the garden of creation, they began to grow more and more selfish toward one another.

This continued many moons and at length the Great Spirit became angry and caused the waters to rise and cover the whole earth for six long moons. At sunrise on the seventh day, from the waters rose a great turtle and on his back were the first new man and woman; and from them sprang the Oneidas, the Tuscaroras and all the other red people.

In this spirit of unity of origin, the Tuscaroras were welcomed and lingered many moons in the lands of the Oneidas where the thistles grew large in the valley of the Chanango.

Wyoming County Wins First Place

Wyoming county won first prize, Otsego county second and Cattaraugus county third in the exhibition of the county home bureaus at the State Fair.

Six counties competed in showing some of the activities of the home bureaus during the past year. These were: Herkimer county, landscaping and home grounds; Otsego county, shampooing rugs; Wyoming county, reconditioning furniture; Cattaraugus county, adding charm to the home at low cost by the use of block printings; Livingston county, frocks that fit; Ulster county, child development. The scores of the three contesting counties on the basis 100 were 92.3, 89, and 88.3. The judges of the exhibition, Mrs. Edgar Van Horn of Alfred Station, Mrs. Olive Foster Parker of Watertown and Bristow Adams of Cornell, noted the fact that all the exhibits had a direction relation to thrift. The rug cleaning demonstration showed how much could be saved by washing the rugs at home, using a jelly made of mild soap; the reconditioning of furniture showed how to take an old morris-chair out of the attic or cellar and make a beautiful arm chair or wing-chair; the one on block printing showed how old sugar sacks or old pieces of rough cloth could be made into handsome wall hangings, by dying the cloth and printing designs on it; and the exhibit on frocks that fit told how to modify commercial patterns to fit the individual figure.

The exhibit exemplified the changes in home bureau activities in the six counties represented at the fair. These are only a few of the home bureau enterprises carried on in the 39 organized counties throughout the state.

Black Knot on Plums

K. H. L. Middleport, writes: "We are afflicted with a pernicious form of black knot on our Fellenberg prune trees. Can you give us any advice on how to control it?"

Professor W. D. Mills, of the department of plant pathology, says: The black knot disease is caused by a fungus which affects only the woody parts of the tree. This fungus spreads very extensively in the spring from galls or knots which you see in the limbs. The remedy for this trouble is to prune out the knots in the fall or early winter, finishing the pruning before January. An annual fall inspection of the trees and the removal and burning of all the knots is the most satisfactory program of control. The pruning must be done thoroughly since if only a few knots are overlooked there will be an extensive spread of the disease the following spring. In very severely affected old trees on which the knots have appeared on the main branches and trunk, it may be necessary to remove the entire tree in order to get rid of the disease and prevent the spread to the younger trees. All plums, prunes and cherries in the near vicinity, both cultivated and wild, should also be pruned to get control of this trouble.

Professor Mills sent a spray schedule for plums. Applying the regular sprays on plums for control of disease and insect troubles aids considerably in the control of the black knot disease.

R. B. H. asks: "Should high testing cows be fed more grain in relation to milk than low testers?"

C. G. Brant says, yes, cows that give milk which is rich in butterfat need more grain for every hundred pounds of milk they give than the cows which are low testers. The common rule for winter feeding is to feed Guernseys and Jerseys, in full flow of milk, one pound of grain to every three and one-half pounds of milk and Holsteins and Ayrshires, one pounds of grain to every four pounds of milk.

The dairymen who are keeping individual test records on their cows, can feed even more accurately than this. Each breed has some individual cows that test higher than others. These cows may profitably handle even more grain than is specified in the rule.

A feeding table prepared for the dairy record club members is inclosed. This table should guide in feeding your cows according to their milk production and butterfat test.

Other dairymen may secure these dairy record club feeding tables by writing, "How, What, and Why" Room 201, Roberts Hall, Ithaca, N. Y.

Grape Festival Will Draw Thousands To Lakeside Village

Detailed plans for the program of the Grape Festival to be held at Hammondsport October 8, were made at a meeting of the program committee held at Hammondsport Friday evening. Wm. Stempfle, manager of the Steuben County Farm Bureau, and chairman of the program committee is assisted by Charles Champlin, William Miller, George Quinn and R. H. Howell, all of Hammondsport.

A feature of the morning program will be an archery contest in which the best shots of Western New York are expected to participate. A dozen or fifteen communities of the Finger Lakes region will be represented in a parade of floats and there will also be several bands to play during the afternoon. The floats are to represent some phase of the grape industry and they will be reviewed by the Queen of the Festival. Keuka College is preparing a program of pageantry and there will also be the crowning of the queen.

The Festival will be held on the C. D. Champlin farm on the shores of Lake Keuka. The meeting which is expected to draw many thousands of people from Western New York, is a part of the program of the farm bureau to advertise the grape crop of the Finger Lakes region. It is expected that events will be held each year at some point in the Finger Lakes.

Millers Approve Valprize Wheat

New York state millers require, for pastry flour, a low-protein wheat that contains a certain quantity of gluten. Such wheat gives the delicate quality of flour which the trade demands, and upon which the enviable reputation of New York state flour depends, explains W. D. Swope of the New York state college of agriculture. Such wheats, either of the white or red varieties, bring growers a higher price even beyond the local advantage in freight rates over shipped-in western hard wheats. This premium has ranged from six cents a bushel last year to nearly forty cents a bushel a few years ago, he says.

New York state mills have preferred white wheat, for it makes flour suitable for pastry purposes, for sweet foods, and for crackers. In addition, nearly a million bushels of white wheat are used annually to make whole wheat products. Red wheat cannot be used for the whole wheat products because of its objectionable color, but it does make suitable pastry flour if it is a low protein variety.

A new red wheat Valprize was introduced by the Cornell University agricultual experiment station in 1930 as a substitute for the varity Forward. Forward was found to contain too much protein for high-grade pastry flour. The New Valprize, Mr. Swope says, is the only red pastry flour wheat; it is resistant to certain diseases, does not shatter, yields well and has stiff straw.

Although a comparatively new wheat, some New York state millers have endorsed its use and encourage more general distribution of the variety. Fred J. Lingham, president of the Federal Mill at Lockport says, in a letter to F. P. Bussell of the state college, "the millers of the state are under obligation to you and your associates for the good work you have done on this wheat problem". Mr. Lingham offers to distribute certified seed wheat to farmers within trucking distance of Lockport without profit so a quantity of the wheat may be available for milling.

Mr. Swope says that a considerable quantity of certified seed is available this season. The grain and the straw may be seen at the college of agriculture exhibit at many of the Western New York county fairs. Lists of growers who have supplies of certified seed may be obtained from the local county agricultural agent or from the plant breeding department at the state college of agriculture at Ithaca.

Dear Mr. Bradley:

It has just come to our attention that you are a candidate for the position of County Clerk of Steuben County and we hasten to extend to you our very best wishes for your success.

Having been associated with you very closely for a period of seventeen years, during which time you have handled more than a thousand carloads of our product, we can unhesitatingly say from experience that you are eminently fitted to fill the position of County Clerk and feel that your County would be subject to congratulations in securing such an able and capable servant. During this long period of time when you have acted as a Royster dealer at Bath, N. Y., it is a matter of record that your accounts have been kept in excellent shape; in fact, you stand out as one of the most satisfactory dealers this Company has in the State of New York.

With best wishes for success in your campaign, and with best regards, I am

Very truly yours,

4-H CLUB NEWS

Sheep Help Boy To College

He started with a lamb as a 4-H Club projection in 1925 and today he has a fine flock. It consists of 12 ewes and a ram, and two show yearlings. That is the record in brief of Gladden Skinner of Tippecanoe County, Indiana. And next year this boy, 20 year old son of a thrifty tenant farmer, expects to increase his flock to 15 ewes. Then it is likely to remain stationary, for Gladden is going to Purdue University for a course in agriculture. But they have proven such a nice feature of the farm program in cleaning up weeds and in other characteristic ways that it is fairly certain they will be a permanent institution on this farm.

It is probable, too, that sheep will always have a warm place in the hearts of Gladden and his parents because the records they made for him in his seven years of sheep projects were important in helping him win a $500 scholarship at Purdue to start him off on a college career. Here are the reasons which Gladden has given, in a letter to Mr. G. L. Noble, managing director of the National Committee on Boys and Girls Club Work.

"In the first place our pastures and fence corners and rows were very weedy," he writes, "and we had always heard there was nothing like sheep to keep foul growth down. And now we know it is true. We also wanted to increase our livestock, but without keeping more of the kind we already had. Also, we rent our farm and whatever I bought to raise, the feed would come from my father's share of the grain. Oats is the cheapest of the grains we grow, and it is also an ideal feed for sheep, especially ewes. So I figured sheep were a better thing for me than some other stock, especially when we had none."

Gladden started with Shropshires and his present flock is composed of purebred individuals of this breed. He chose them because they were a popular breed in his section, which meant a good sale for his surplus breeding stock, and they are also a general purpose animal. Success has not come without closely attending to business. In the seven years of lamb projects, Gladden has studied the habits of his sheep, studied the literature on sheep, learned all he could from sheepmen, and faithfully attended to the flock, rain or shine. The last three years he has gone into beef calves and has made a fine record in that line. Gladden's success with sheep earned him the office of assistant director in the sheep department of the county fair.

BEWARE

Of False Political Advertisements

The Crusaders, the wettest of the wets, are endeavoring to defeat all dry Congressmen and nominate wets.

They believe that if they can defeat Stalker in the primary, they can readily defeat his 29 year old opponent in the election. They know that there are already too many lawyers in Congress, three out of every four members being of the legal profession.

Read the Crusaders' political advertisements in other papers throughout the United States and you will find the same ads written about other Congressmen. The majority of these advertisements in no way relate to Mr. Stalker.

Don't let their Democratic publicity men deceive you. There are five counties in this Congressional District and only one County Chairman has endorsed the candidate of the wets.

There is no one in Congress who has supported President Hoover more loyally than Congressman Stalker. Mr. Stalker was President and Mrs. Hoover's guest at luncheon at the White House on the day President Hoover delivered his famous acceptance speech.

Congressman Stalker voted for the Home Loan Bank Bill and for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Congressman Stalker is one of the leading advocates of economy in Government and reduced his salary by his own vote.

Mr. Stalker is a member of three important and powerful committees. This Congressional District has never kept a Member in Congress long enough to become a Chairman of a Committee, as seniority is strictly adhered to. New members are placed at the foot of the Committee table and little is heard or expected from them the first two terms. The last Congress was organized by Democrats and no Republican member is Chairman of a Committee.

Congressman Stalker is the author of the Jones-Stalker Bill. No other member of Congress from the District has ever had his name attached to National Legislation.

Congressman Stalker has been present and voted on all occasions except during his brief illness. During this time he was paired with a Democrat which is equivalent to voting.

United States Secretary of Labor, William N. Doak, granted an interview with a representative of the Elmira Advertiser, praising Congressman Stalker very highly and issued the following statement:

"Mr. Stalker has been a loyal supporter of the administration", Secretary Doak stated. He has been on the job and is one of the hardest workers in Congress. He is thoroughly a rock-ribbed Republican and well liked in Washington. Moreover, he has been one of the leading advocates of economy in government and has voted to reduce his own salary.

Mr. Stalker received the following letter from Bertrand H. Snell, Republican leader of the House, at the close of the adjournment of the recent session of Congress:

Dear Gale:

I want to take this opportunity to thank you for your co-operation and support during the past session. It has been a hard session but because of willingness on the part of the individual members to work together, I think we have come out in pretty good shape.

I hope you have a pleasant vacation and will come back with renewed strength and energy to join in fighting our Democratic opponents.

With kindnes personal regards, I remain

Yours truly,

BERT SNELL.
